Walker Ceiling/Wall Lamp

Danish designer Søren Rose was commissioned to design the Walker Lamp for The Silo – a former grain tower converted into apartments and public space in Copenhagen. The development is the centerpiece of an urban revitalization scheme transforming the Nordhavnen waterfront district of the city. Each of the Silo's 17 stories varies in size – resulting in 40 uniquely proportioned apartments (including one owned by MENU's founder Bjarne Hansen). No two apartments are the same, but each is fitted with the brass Walker Lamp.

About the Designer

Danish designer Søren Rose started his career as an entrepreneur and creative director – setting up one of Scandinavia's most successful web companies, among other enterprises. In 2008, he fulfilled a life-long dream by opening a design studio in New York, and today also has an outpost in Copenhagen.

The studio famously operates a no-hierarchy rule: “If a junior designer has the best idea that's what we go with,” Søren explains.
